Third Sunday of Lent

TAKE A GOOD DRINK

Water does three things.

The most obvious thing it does is to wet. Whatever water comes into contact with, it changes. The sound of children squealing with delight at the end of a hosepipe is a familiar one. So is the groan of someone caught in the rain without an umbrella. If water gets on you, then you're no longer the same. For better or worse!

Water also cleans. We use it to wash in since it is one of the best agents we know of for taking away stains and dirt. Perhaps it's not surprising that when Christians think of water they often associate it with baptism's role in cleansing us from original sin. The psalms too speak frequently about being washed from sin and made whiter than snow.

Yet it's not this aspect of water that Jesus emphasises in today's gospel. It's the third function of water: water refreshes and brings life.

All over the world today there are men and women standing in our churches who are asking to be admitted to the Church community, to be baptised, to become Christians. And the gospel addressed to them on this day is about the gift which Jesus promises: water to take away your thirst and lead you on to eternal life.

If you are to be a Christian, then it's because you find the message of Jesus so attractive that no other drink will satisfy you. The promise of Jesus reaches the parts that no other drink can reach. And what a promise this is! Jesus tells us that our deepest yearnings and longings will be satisfied. In him life begins to make sense, priorities start to change, the will of God becomes our only goal.

So as thousands of would-be Christians stand before congregations today and ask to be given this living water, we use the opportunity to count our own blessings and to thank God for the gift of faith which we often take for granted but which we know is a well from which we can draw water in times of drought, and a spring that offers us eternal life.
